What is the Metaverse, really?

From Alex Ross' Gallery in the Metaverse

This summer, Octane user '24601' (not his actual account ID, but close enough!) was giving me feedback on the site and the Maya plug-in, and we got to talking about ORC (which was about to launch to a wider audience the following month).

RNDR: Art of the Metaverse

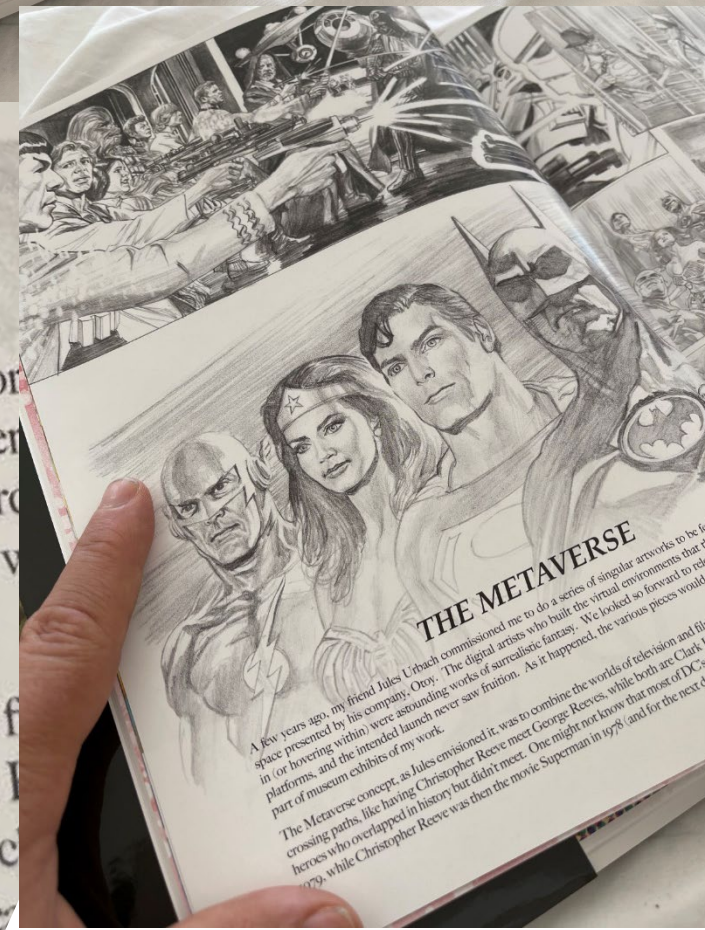

THE METAVERSE

A few years ago, my friend Jules Urbach commissioned me to do a series of singular artworks presented by his company, Otoy. The digital artists who built the virtual environments in (or hovering within) were astounding works of surrealistic fantasy. We looked so forward to their platforms, and the intended launch never saw fruition. As it happened, the various pieces were part of museum exhibits of my work.

The Metaverse concept, as Jules envisioned it, was to combine the worlds of television and film crossing paths, like having Christopher Reeve meet George Reeves, while both are Clark Kent. Two heroes who overlapped in history but didn't meet. One might not know that most of DC's characters were created in the 1930s and 1940s (and for the next decade)

yes, one of my ideas for ordinality in \$RNDR was to provide a marker, to be used with smart contract for NFT like scenarios, for unique asset ownership resolution. Lot's to do in phase IV... anyway would love to try this with @thealexrossart @muratpak or @beeplesart down the line

Makes sense.. There's many collaborations between protocols and products possible in that space. Another obvious one would be @rariblecom / @KnownOrigin_io / @async + @OTOY $RDNR decentralized GPU rendering. Offer 3D artists deals on tokens/render time for their next creations 🌟
